Thursday, September 11, 2014 marked BGC's Tenth Annual Charity Day.

BGC Partners, together with its affiliate Cantor Fitzgerald, raised approximately $12 million globally on this single day for dozens of charities around the world.

To date, Charity Day has raised approximately $113 million for hundreds of charitable causes.

Held in commemoration of the 658 Cantor employees and 61 Eurobrokers employees lost in the 9/11 World Trade Center attacks, each anniversary is a poignant occasion for us.

Every year, BGC Partners and our affiliate Cantor Fitzgerald, in conjunction with the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund, strive to turn a tragic day into one that is positive and uplifting by distributing 100% of our global revenues on Charity Day to the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund and dozens of charities around the world. The Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund, initially created to assist families of Cantor employees who were lost on 9/11, has since broadened its mission to provide aid to victims of terrorism, natural disasters, emergencies, direct service charities and wounded members of the military.

We are thankful to all our celebrity guests who joined us in New York on Charity Day and raised money for tremendous causes. In addition, many thanks to our clients, brokers and charities whose commitment, support, enthusiasm and graciousness made Charity Day a spectacular success.

THE WALL STREET JOURNAL.

Evolving a Sept. 11 Charity

Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund is eyeing its next big step

Edie Lutnick, the head of the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund, on the roof of her apartment in Manhattan. With Briefing for The Wall Street Journal.

A few weeks before this year's anniversary of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, Edie Lutnick met with Cantor Fitzgerald employees to review logistics for the company's annual private memorial service. Discussion veered from microphones and catering to the perennial disorganization of the main public commemoration.

The ever-scriber job of memorial planning is just one that Ms. Lutnick, 55 years old, has shouldered since the days immediately after Sept. 11, when she traded a career as a labor attorney for years of unpaid work running the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund. As the group's co-founder and executive director, she has been involved in almost every issue affecting the families of the 658 Cantor Fitzgerald employees who died that day.

Now, 13 years after the attacks, as the attention of many donors has shifted, Ms. Lutnick said she would decide the next big step for her organization, which has given away more than $270 million since 2001.

The National September 11 Memorial Museum, set to open to the public next week, includes exhibits large and small that tell the story of Sept. 11.

- Earlier

anything, you know, knock on wood—I've been able to kind of go, "Wow, a little bit."

Ms. Lutnick is arguably one of the most powerful and respected leaders in the wider Sept. 11 charitable community—and not just because of the relative size of her fund. Redolent a fiercely protective older-sister aura, she is both a sharp advocate for victims and family members and an unabashed hugger.

"She has not left that site in almost 13 years," said Lee Ielpi, co-founder of the 9/11 Tribute Center and father of a slain firefighter. "My gut feeling is it wasn't for Edie and her ability to speak from the heart, the World Trade Center site might not be as powerful as it is today."

Among those killed was Ms. Lutnick's youngest brother Gary, a 36-year-old managing director at Cantor Fitzgerald. Ms. Lutnick said he was the brother she raised after their parents died, and that he took his last breaths while on the phone with her that September morning. She wore two bracelets with his name around her wrist and a necklace with his image around her neck.

Ms. Lutnick's surviving brother, Howard Lutnick, the chairman and chief executive of Cantor Fitzgerald LP, a financial-services firm, wasn't in his office in the north tower of the World Trade Center that morning when two-thirds of his staff died. His vow, made days after the attack, was to take care of the families. Ms. Lutnick carried out that promise.

The main work of the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund ended with the 10-year anniversary. For five years, Cantor Fitzgerald provided 25% of the firm's profits to families, a total of about $180 million. It provided 10 years of health care to victims' kin.

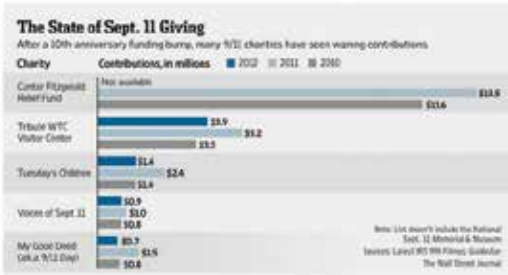

Ms. Lutnick and her assistant continue to respond to family members' needs. Some of the charity's longtime recipients call just to share good news or hear her take on the 9/11 Memorial Museum.

Cantor Fitzgerald and its affiliate, BGC Partners (NYSE: BGC), donate all global revenues earned each Sept. 11 to the relief fund. In 2013, the firm raised about $12 million on its "charity day." Over nine years, the event has raised $101 million.

Money raised from the annual charity day is now distributed to dozens of needy nonprofits, including the Caldwell, N.J.-based September 11th Education Trust, which tries to merge themes of history, heroism and public service into classroom curricula.

Anthony Gardner, the trust's founder, said he has seen overall interest in Sept. 11 charities wane in recent years as other catastrophic events have "captured people's attention and, certainly, their philanthropy."

Ms. Lutnick and her fund, he said, "recognize that the missions continue and that there is still so much work to be done to get 9/11 taught in schools."

Charity-day money also allows the organization to respond to emergencies. In 2012, some $10 million in $1,000 debit cards were given to victims of superstorm Sandy. In 2013, the fund distributed $2 million in debit cards to people affected by the Moore, Okla., tornado.

Ms. Lutnick's wish is for Cantor Fitzgerald's fund to be seen as an alternative to other major disaster-related charities. She contends that her model of direct financial assistance—which reduces bureaucracy and gives victims more say over how money is used—makes better sense, is fast and cost-effective.

Another idea she has is to institute a formal program to support and highlight worthy, but unknown charities. That could take the form of a website, she said, or a kind of buying guide for philanthropists.

Whatever her next step, Ms. Lutnick said she hasn't considered retirement. "The joke in my family," she quipped, "is that Gary is up in heaven with my parents laughing that they finally gave Edie the only job she couldn't quit."

Edie Falco Remembers 9/11 on Charity Day

For Edie Falco, it's the look on children's faces when they see a performance of a show they've worked on that's the reason for her involvement with the 52nd Street Project, an organization that matches inner city kids in New York with professional actors to create original theater.

Falco has been working with the Project for 15 years, performing in and supporting the program. "When I go to see the shows that are written by these kids, and they get to see actors doing their plays — it just does something to them," the "Nurse Jackie" star said.

This year, the 52nd Street Project will be a beneficiary of Charity Day, established by brokerage firm Cantor Fitzgerald and its affiliate, BGC Partners, to raise money for the families of the 658 Cantor employees who died during the 9/11 World Trade Center attacks. Now, donations collected during the fundraiser help charities across the globe. More than $100 million has been raised since the event's inception.

Each year, actors help the brokerage company raise money. Falco, who has been involved in Charity Day since its inception, was in New York on the day of the attacks.

"I was standing in downtown Manhattan on the street, just watching the whole thing unfold," she said. "I really lost my footing on that day; everybody did."

The Brooklyn-born actress describes a "certain heaviness" on 9/11, but added that the good that's being done by Charity Day is the overriding feeling. Being able to commemorate the day and to represent the 52nd Street Project, she said, is a "perfect combination." NIKARA JOHNS
